

Anemones, ranunculas, lilies and a cymbidium orchid arranged in Vitriified Studio ceramics mingle with easy elegance. Arrangement design is by Fieldwork Flowers, known for their airy organic approach, captivating use of perennials and artistic eye for color and texture. Flowers are sourced from local farmers who work diligently to cultivate the healthiest botanicals.

Anemones can be a bit challenging in arrangements with their delicate curvy stems, but the dramatic black centers add visual punch to arrangements. Colors range from blue, pink, purple, red or white.

Anemone & Hyacinth

A close-up photograph of a bouquet of flowers in a white glass vase. The bouquet features several pink and purple flowers, including anemones and hyacinths. The flowers are in various stages of bloom, with some fully open and others as buds. The background is a soft, out-of-focus grey.

The softer muted color palette of hellebores is often more toward mauve, burgundy, white, green or pale yellow. To keep them perky in arrangements, dip the stems in hot water after trimming and place them in cool water up to their necks overnight to help them last longer. Hellebores have a place in nearly any garden, offering extended blooms well into the year.

Lilacs, now available as plants in several sizes including dwarf, evoke childhood memories of stunning spring fragrant blooms. Kangaroo Paw, with their upright spikes of fuzzy flowers in brilliant colors, make great cut flowers.
